TABLE OF CONTENTS

Preface 15

Chapter I. Breaking out of Alice's looking-glass: an introduction 17

Chapter II. What is international law attached to? . . 39

A. Dimensions of the international process 41

1. The demographic dimension of the world community 41
2. The ethno-cultural dimension of the world community 45
3. The historical dimension of the world community. 49
4. The economic, environmental and resource dimension of the world community 57
5. The war system dimension of the world community. 63
6. The scientific and technological dimension of the world community 70
7. The dimension of interdependence of the world community 72
8. The "sovereign" State dimension of the world community 74

Chapter III. Some propositions and conditioning factors 78

A. The organized and unorganized character of international processes 79
B. Symbols of authority 81
C. Commitments to support arrangements 83
D. Interest and common interest. 85
E. The volatility of international law 87

1. Diversity 87
2. The dialectical character of law 90
3. Judicial anachronism 91
4. Intellectual revisionism 93
5. Incomplete knowledge at the time of judgment 94
6. The dynamism of a science and technologically based civilization 94

F. Law's myth systems and operational codes . . . 95
G. Power. 105

Chapter IV. The world constitutive process and its decision functions 112

A. Unorganized and non-hierarchical constitutive structures 118
B. Ineffective constitutive structures 118
C. Effective but limited constitutive structures . . . 120
D. Effective constitutive structures 122
E. The succession of constitutive processes in international law 124

Chapter V. The international lawmaking function . . . 134

A. Prescribing as a process of communication . . . 134
B. Soft law 151
C. Democratization of international lawmaking . . 155

Chapter VI. Two modes of principled decision-making 168

A. Multiple modes of decision-making 168
B. The textual-rule-based mode 177
C. The policy-context-based mode 183
D. Mapping 190

Chapter VII. The international law-applying function . 195

A. The scope of international application 195
B. The promotion function 199
C. Differing scopes of authority 201
D. Are there constitutional limits? 204
E. Consent as a prerequisite for application 206
F. Appliers as prescribers 218
G. National judges 225
H. International arbitrators 226

Chapter VIII. Participation arrangements for States: the transformation of self-determination and the emergence of the individual 229

A. The process of consociation and the demand for self-determination 230
B. International membership criteria: from membership by power to membership by right 233
C. The ironic role of uti possidetis 255
D. Recognition 257

Chapter IX. Sovereignty and human rights: changing the internal arrangements of States by external means 263

A. Human rights and regime change 267
B. Governments-in-exile 280

Chapter X. The actors theory has ignored 283

A. Intergovernmental organizations 284
B. Transnational corporations or MNCs 293
C. Non-governmental organizations. 303
D. Terrorists and terrorist groups 314
E. Gangs. 321
F. The constellation of members of the international legal system in the future: interdependencies and hybridizations 323

Chapter XI. Human rights and individualism: regulating national control and providing international protection. 327

A. The globalization of diaspora and its international legal implications 327

1. The globalization of corporate nationals . . . 332
2. Nationality goals for the twenty-first century 333

B. International regulation of the competence to ascribe nationality 334
C. The international regulation of withdrawal or termination of nationality 341
D. Nationality as the basis for protection in external arenas. 347
E. The function of the exhaustion rule 350
F. The Calvo Clause and the exhaustion rule. . . . 357
G. The prescription and application of international human rights protections 359

1. The individual as the centre of international human rights law 360
2. Modern human rights applications 370
3. Human rights protections in the twenty-first century 373

Chapter XII. Contingencies for the use of force: myth system and operational code 377

A. Proactive jus ad bellum 381

1. Decolonization wars 381
2. Wars of national liberation 384
3. Assistance in internal wars 385
4. Humanitarian intervention. 386
5. Protection of nationals abroad. 388
6. Military exercises as a form of threat 389
7. Reprisals 391

8. Spheres of influence 391
9. Regime change 393
10. Just war as a jus ad bellum 394

B. Reactive jus ad bellum: self-defence 395

Chapter XIII. The use and abuse of force: jus in bello 404

A. The modes of force 404
B. The reason for compliance 407
C. The "MNPD" principles 416
D. Absolute and relative prohibitions of the jus in bello 422
E. The decay of absolute prohibitions 424

Chapter XIV. The penumbra of professionalism: the citizenship role of the international lawyer 433

A. Clarifying the common interest: general principles of content and procedure 440

1. The principle of minimum order 442
2. The principle of the avoidance of surplus violence 445
3. The principle of enhancing life opportunities: development 446
4. The principle of contextual integration . . . 450
5. The principle of economy 451
6. The principle of second best solutions . . . 452
7. The principle of environmental conservation 452
8. The principle of sustainable development . . 453
9. The principle of cultivation of rationality . . 453
10. The principle of valid legal process 453

Chapter XV. International law as a profession: dilemmas of identity and commitment 455

A. The Shawcross dilemma 455
B. The international lawyer's dilemma 458
C. Bureaucracy and responsibility 462
D. The complexity of international professional responsibility 467
E. Some inspiring examples 473
F. Alternative futures 477

About the author 480

Biographical note 480
Principal publications 480