Contents

List of Tables x
List of Figures xi
List of Acronyms xii
Series Editors' Preface xiii
Acknowledgements xiv

Part I Preferences, Security Institutions and Transaction Costs in World Politics

1 Introduction 3
   Two puzzles in ESDP 4
   ESDP and the internationalisation of the use of force 6
   The argument: transaction costs and security institutions 7
   The main findings: transaction costs and the emergence of the ESDP 11
   The research design 15
   The plan of the book 17

2 Theorising Preference Formation for Institution-Building in European Security 19
   Realism: anarchy and power 20
   Liberal Intergovernmentalism (LI): market and domestic interest groups 22
   Constructivism: socialisation and culture 24
   Theory, practice and the necessity of an innovative approach 26

3 Transaction Costs and Security Institutions 29
   Transaction costs and preference formation in European security: an analytical framework 29
   Transaction costs for the provision of European security 38
   Transaction costs within the ESDP 40
   The causal pathways 41
   Transaction costs and preference formation in European security: the empirical link 43
Part II Unravelling the European Security and Defence Policy (ESDP)

4 The Demand for a Security Institution: German, British and French Perceptions of the Environment in the 1990s
   Germany and the gradual rise of risks in the 1990s 53
   The United Kingdom’s adaptation to a new environment in the 1990s 55
   France and the increasing instabilities of the 1990s 56
   A demand for a security institution: German, British and French perceptions in perspective 58

5 Germany – From Defending the Alliance’s Territory to Crisis Management for the Union
   German preferences on substantive scope 60
   Explaining German preferences on substance: facing more risks, while relying less on the United States 67

6 Great Britain – From Opposing the Union towards a Subordinated ESDP
   British preferences on substantive scope 79
   Explaining British preferences on substance: ‘It’s Time to Repay America the Soldier’ 86

7 France – From Gradual WEU Integration to Full-Scale ESDP
   French preferences on substantive scope 97
   Explaining French preferences on substance: providing security in a highly uncertain environment 102

8 Germany – An Incrementally Decreasing Willingness to Bind the Country
   German preferences on institutional depth 114
   Explaining German preferences on depth: uncertainty, asset specificity and the institutional path of ESDP 120

9 Great Britain – From No EU Security Policy to a Purely Intergovernmental ESDP
   British preferences on institutional depth 135
   Explaining British preferences on depth: modest uncertainty and the opportunities of non-specific assets 140

10 France – A Consistently Intergovernmental Approach towards ESDP
   French preferences on institutional depth 152
   Explaining French preferences on depth: maintaining residual rights of control 157
Part III  Transaction Costs and Security Institutions: ESDP Unravelled

11 Alternative Explanations and Theoretical Scope of the Transaction Costs Framework
   Testing the plausibility of a transaction costs framework 173
   Defining the scope of the transaction costs argument 181

12 Conclusion – Theory-Development in the European Security and Defence Policy
   Transaction costs, security institutions and unravelling the ESDP 189
   The principal conclusions: filling the gap with a new conceptual lens 190
   Transforming Europe’s governance of defence without replacing the state 203

Notes 211
References 237
Index 263