

Contents

Preface	viii
Table of legislation	xi
Table of cases	xvi
1. Copyright as property	1
I The legal concept of dematerialised property	1
1 The meanings of the term ‘property’	3
2 The concept of ‘property right’	5
3 The concept of ‘property object’ or ‘thing’ or ‘res’ in law	10
II Copyright as a primary example of dematerialised property	12
1 The application of the concept of dematerialised property to copyright	13
2 The proprietarian Common law conception of copyright: protection against parasitical unfair competition and free-ride	35
3 The less proprietarian Civil law conception of author’s rights (droits d’auteur): protection of a person’s creation through personality protection	47
III Conclusion	60
2. Copyright-property and the public domain: explanations and justifications	68
I Historical-philosophical and economic explanations of property and copyright-property and their limited usefulness for modern copyright law	68
1 Explanations and justifications of property and copyright deriving from classical political philosophy	70
2 Economic explanations and justifications of property and copyright	91
II A test of political-philosophical concepts: the idea of the public domain as a default position and starting point	97
1 Constructions of the ‘public domain’	97
2 Another construction of the ‘public domain’	109

3	A Kantian approach to the enforceability of viral contracts in the cyberspace	114
III	Conclusion: the value of philosophical justifications for modern copyright law and for the understanding of the public domain	118
3.	The limitations to the powers of copyright ownership	123
I	Limitations as to conceptual extent	123
1	The idea–expression dichotomy	125
2	Copyright exceptions and limitations: restricted real rights in copyright?	137
II	Limitations as to time: term of protection	144
III	Conclusion	148
4.	The attribution and allocation of copyright-property: authorship, creativity and ownership	149
I	‘L’auteur est mort, vive le propriétaire!’	149
1	The concept of the ‘romantic author’ and the anti-author movement in literary criticism and copyright theory	149
2	The exaggeration of the ‘romantic author-genius’ construct	156
3	The source of the ‘romantic author’ criticism – what Barthes and Foucault actually said: ‘death of the author’?	166
4	Legal concepts of authorship in copyright law and the relevance of postmodernist interpretations of authorship in legal reality	170
5	The implicit favouring of ownership over authorship in ‘anti-author’ conceptions	177
II	Creativity: the vexing fetish	182
1	Art and author’s creativity and their relationship to copyright: attempts at a description of creativity	182
2	Copyright and creativity: aporetic copyright rules	188
3	Authorship and originality/creativity in relation to restorations: ‘normative’ originality	194
4	The ‘creativity’ rhetoric of the creative industries	196
III	Conclusion	198
5.	The effects of copyright-property I: the problem of alienation	201
I	The legal preconditions for alienation I: transfer of copyright	201
1	Assignments and licences	202
2	Works created by employees	208

II	The legal preconditions for alienation II: security rights over copyright	213
III	The concept of alienation	215
	1 Alienation according to Hegel and Marx	216
	2 Karl Renner: change of social function behind the immutable legal institution of property and ownership	222
	3 Copyright and alienation	225
IV	The weaknesses of a moral rights protection system	237
	1 The idea of moral rights: a remedy against alienation?	237
	2 The impact of moral rights on the exercise of economic rights after their transfer	240
V	Conclusion	244
6.	The effects of copyright-property II: neo-feudal and neo-colonial features of international copyright protection	247
I	International copyright as a basis for neo-feudal and neo-colonial trends	247
II	The powers of copyright-property: property, sovereignty and feudal relations	249
	1 Human expressions as property for power: the concept of the 'product' in business and marketing	249
	2 The exploitation of copyright: employment, alienation and licensing as a kind of new feudal relationship	256
III	Neo-colonialism with the assistance of copyright	267
	1 The classical legal distinction between property and sovereignty, and the reality	267
	2 Copyright as a legal device for neo-colonialism	268
IV	Conclusion	272
	Conclusions	274
	Bibliography	280
	Index	303