

Contents

|              |   |
|--------------|---|
| Foreword     | 1 |
| Introduction | 4 |
| Chronology   | 8 |

|   |    |
|---|----|
| 1. Understanding the Legal Issues of Social Networking Sites | 13 |
|---|----|

Kevin Fayle

Citing numerous court cases on copyright infringement, defamation, and freedom of speech, an editor for a law website explains the emerging legal obligations and liabilities for social networks and their users.

|   |    |
|---|----|
| 2. Social Networks Should Be Banned at Libraries and Schools | 21 |
|---|----|

David W. Zellis

An assistant district attorney advocates a ban on social networks at public schools and libraries, and warns that these sites expose children and adolescents to online predators, bullying, and crime.

|   |    |
|---|----|
| 3. Social Networks Should Not Be Banned at Libraries and Schools | 27 |
|---|----|

Lauren Pressley

A librarian argues that banning social networks at public schools and libraries may inadvertently limit the educational opportunities and Internet literacy of students.

|   |    |
|---|----|
| 4. Students' Rights on MySpace Should Be Protected | 36 |
| Personal Narrative                                 |    |

Selina Maclaren

A high school student offers her personal views on not using MySpace but also defends her classmates' individual rights on the site over the responsibilities of schools to warn students and their parents.

5. Banning Social Networks
Would Be Counterproductive 43

Wade Roush

A technology journalist asserts that a ban on social networks at public schools and libraries would affect underprivileged students and their participation in a technology-oriented society.

6. Laws Against Cyberbullying Are Necessary to Protect Young People 49

Nancy Willard

A director for an Internet advocacy group recommends that anti-cyberbullying policies and legislation allow school officials to respond to online harassment and intimidation that take place on and off campus.

7. Laws Against Cyberbullying May Infringe on Free Speech 59

Alex Johnson

A reporter contends that many state laws and local policies against cyberbullying are not well-defined and allow school administrators to infringe the free speech rights of students.

8. A College Student Discusses How Cyberbullying
Threatened Her Education
Personal Narrative 68

Lynda Lopez

A college student recalls how a cyberbully on Facebook impersonated and harassed her online—nearly sabotaging her college scholarship and career—and how it changed her perceptions of social networking.

9. Social Networks May Erode Young People’s Privacy 72

Daniel J. Solove

A privacy-law expert suggests that when young people share intimate details about their lives on social networks they are redefining what is considered public and private.

10. Young People Are More Protective of Their Privacy on Social Networks 82

Laura M. Holson

A New York Times reporter insists that young people have become more careful and deliberate about what they share on social networks.

11. The Federal Trade Commission Protects the Privacy of Teens on Social Networks 89

Jessica Rich

A deputy director of the Federal Trade Commission’s Bureau of Consumer Protection explains its role and activities in ensuring the privacy of children and teens on social networks.

12. Young People and Free Speech Can Be Protected on Social Networks 100

Stephen Balkam

The founder of the Family Online Safety Institute maintains that legislation emphasizing both educational and technological solutions can protect young people from online harassment and guard their freedom of speech.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| 13. Court Rulings on Social Networks, Teens, and Free Speech Rights Are Unclear  | 108 |
| Michael J. Kasdan  |     |
| An attorney claims that the courts are grappling with students' free speech rights on social networks; in his view, extending schools' authority to regulate off-campus online speech is dangerous. |     |
| 14. Teens with Websites May Not Be Liable for Content by Third Parties   | 119 |
| Thomas A. Jacobs   |     |
| A former judge presents a court case in which a student was not found liable for negative and threatening comments posted by visitors on his website.   |     |
| 15. Defamation and Fraudulent Profiles on Social Networks  | 126 |
| Chris Gatewood   |     |
| A lawyer illustrates ways that profiles may or may not be defamatory and ways that social networks may remove them under their terms of use to steer clear of lawsuits.                             |     |
| 16. Copyright Laws Must Be Changed for Youths and Students on the Internet   | 132 |
| J. Patrick McGrail and Ewa McGrail   |     |
| Two professors contend that copyright has failed to keep pace with digital and Internet technologies; they advise educators to help students understand how such laws apply online.                 |     |
| Organizations to Contact   | 143 |
| For Further Reading  | 147 |
| Index  | 150 |