

Contents

Notes on contributors	vii
An introduction to the role of labour standards in development TONIA NOVITZ AND DAVID MANGAN	1
Part I Theoretical connections between work and development	17
1 Comparative institutional advantage in the context of development BOB HEPPLE QC	19
2 Human freedom and human capital: re-imagining labour law for development BRIAN LANGILLE	28
Part II Addressing social exclusion and discrimination	39
3 Gender, equality and capabilities: care work and sustainable development JUDY FUDGE	41
4 The political economy of women's human rights: problems of gender, violence, development and labour JACQUI TRUE	58
5 Promoting equality through social inclusion: case studies from the European social charter MARK BELL	76

Part III Child poverty and child labour as an obstruction to development	95
6 Some remarks on the economics of child labour SONIA BHALOTRA	97
7 Child labour: an analysis of the nature of corporate responsibility SURYA DEVA	106
Part IV Development through trade and/or aid?	123
8 The very basis of our existence: labour and the neglected environmental dimension of sustainable development BEATE SJÅFJELL	125
9 Development, the movement of persons and labour law: reasonable labour market access and its decent work complement ADELLE BLACKETT	143
Part V Achieving development through social dialogue, corporate social responsibility and other participatory strategies	169
10 Corporate social responsibility: its potential and its limits for labour participation CHARLOTTE VILLIERS	171
11 Corporate social responsibility meets traditional supervision of fundamental labour rights: why CSR needs social dialogue to fill the governance gaps DAVID TAJGMAN	188
12 Big unions and big business: can international framework agreements promote sustainable development at a local level? TONIA NOVITZ	224
An afterword: impressions and suggestions for a way forward ROLPH VAN DER HOEVEN	243
Index	250